James H. Wickes, president of the Wickes Refrigerating Compary, was killed by falling from the second story window of a house in Detroit, on Friday evening. He was general superintendent of the Merchants' Dispatch Transportation Company and president of the company owning the Wickes refrigerator cars, and was very wealthy. It is said that after closing a large contract, on Friday, for the construction of cars, Mr. Wickes began drinking with a number of friends. It is supposed he was sitting in a window in a house which the party visited and lost his balance and fell headlong to the pavement.
